Re-defining workspaces

Offices have been notoriously sterile for many decades. White desks, minimal distractions, purpose built to get the job done.

Following Covid 19 lockdown, Working From Home (WFH) became a new normal. Replacing office desks with dining tables, the comforts of our own homes, variety of workstations, breaks, and the general working environment.

2021 then presented a global wave - 'The Great Resignation'. Individuals addressed their health needs; recognising the stress and burn out of 'old' working ways, and many people resigned from their roles. So what next?

The Vision

The average employee spend more than s 37.5 hours at work per week, so it is essential to provide a workspace that resonates with individual's health goals and overall wellbeing.

The Vision In Practice

Out with the old. Bleak, unwelcoming offices are not enriching environments to be in. So how can we expect top performance from the team, employee retention and attracting new talent? We can't. So we need to change the workspace.

Biophilic Design- enhance employee wellbeing through our natural, hardwired connection to nature. Soften the tone with earthy colours, nature sounds, live plants and foliage. Oxygenate the air, add texture, height, tones, air purifying greenery.
